

Chapter One

This is the first paragraph on the first page. It exists to prove that ordinary body text extracts correctly, in reading order, with a normal font.

This is a second paragraph, on the same page, so paragraph-boundary detection has something to work with.

This whole line is italic, to prove font-based style detection has a real signal to read.

This paragraph opens the second page.
Nothing before it on this page — a page-break-with-no-heading case for the recovery pass to classify.

A Short Poem

*Line one of the poem,
line two of the poem,
centered and italic,
so verse detection has a fixture.*